GOVERNOR

MESSAGE FROM GOVERNOR BENJAMIN J. CAYETANO TO ALOHA, THE MAGAZINE OF HAWAII AND THE PACIFIC

November 1997

On behalf of the people of the State of Hawaii, I am pleased to send my greetings, and warmest aloha, to the publisher of ALOHA, the Magazine of Hawaii and the Pacific and its many readers.

It is a great honor for me to extend my congratulations on the publication of this twentieth anniversary edition of your excellent magazine. For two decades, ALOHA magazine has provided an important journalistic link between the people of Hawaii and the Pacific region. I commend Davick Publications for continuing this proud tradition.

Our islands have been blessed with a magnificent natural environment and a rich multi-cultural heritage. Through the pages of ALOHA magazines, with its attractive graphics and timely articles, both residents and visitors alike can gain a greater appreciation of the special qualities of island life.

Best wishes for many more years of successful publishing.

Aloha,

Benjamin J. Cayetano

Celebrating 50 Years of Aloha.

Her eyes followed the cascading water that fell from Rainbow Falls. Through the ferns, she watched it tumble and create a fog-like mist on top of the pool below.

The next day, she stood in the middle of a centuries-old lava flow, looked down and noticed an ancient Hawaiian stick figure, called a petroglyph, carved into a rock. One person from pre-history made his mark here. And she, untold generations later, saw it. And she marveled at the symmetry of life.

She used to think about tiny cocktail umbrellas WHEN

In Hilo, within just a few short hours, they walked through a Japanese church, a Chinese cemetery, had lunch in a Korean restaurant and shopped for Asian antiques. She thought to herself that the Big Island is certainly a small world.

Later that week, they drove the old and twisting road down to Milolii, the last of the old-style Hawaiian fishing villages. In talking to the fishermen, she found herself unable to look away from their magnificently carved faces. And to herself, she kept repeating, "this is the way it really was."

One afternoon, taking a break from her book on the beach, she looked with astonishment at the four huge volcanic mountains which nearly surrounded her. Broad-shouldered Mauna Loa and Hualalai, snow-capped Mauna Kea and cloud-shrouded Haleakala, across the channel on Maui. In a way, it made her feel insignificant. Yet in another way, it crystalized her feeling about Hawaii's Big Island.

SOMEBODY MENTIONED PARADISE.

Here was nature at its most primitive. But right beside it is tangible evidence of how human beings can live inside nature without disrupting it. It comforted her and she knew this was just the first of many trips she and her family would make to this singularly beautiful Big Island. She smiled to herself and thought,

"We'd better keep this island a secret."

WHAT'S NEW, WHAT'S HOT

The Hawaiian Heirloom Jewelry Museum provides intriguing insights into the history of the prized, distinctive jewelry.

A JEWEL OF A MUSEUM

Jewelry lovers around the world know the beauty and fine craftsmanship of Hawaiian heirloom jewelry—exquisite gold creations accented with black enamel engravings. The jewelry has a proud history, and it can now be relived by visiting the Hawaiian Heirloom Jewelry Museum in Waikiki.

Owner Phil Rickard describes the museum as "a very special place that traces the emotional and mechanical history of this world-famous jewelry." Located at the Royal Hawaiian Shopping Center (Ilima Court, third floor), the museum houses several intriguing exhibits and photos detailing the history and evolution of Hawaiian heirloom jewelry, including an authentic nineteenth-century jeweler's work bench area complete with tools and equipment. Also displayed are modern-day tools used in the manufacturing of the jewelry.

Right next door to the museum is the Hawaiian Heirloom Jewelry Factory, where you can actually view master jewelers handcrafting Hawaiian jewelry. In addition, Hawaiian Heirloom Jewelry: A Lasting Remembrance, an authoritative book on the subject authored by Rickard, is available for purchase.

The Hawaiian Heirloom Jewelry Museum is open daily from 9:00 A.M. to 10:00 P.M. The Royal Hawaiian Shopping Center is located at 2301 Kalākaua Avenue. Call 924-7972.

MAKING A BIG SPLASH

Everyone knows dolphins are smarter than the average mammal. In fact, they're even the principals of their own university—Splash U! Enrollment is open to the public, and akamai visitors can earn a degree in "Dolphinology."

Splash U is the latest offering to guests at Sea Life Park, home to dolphins, sea lions, sharks, rays, reef fish, penguins, sea turtles and a false killer whale. Splash U students get to touch, teach and interact with bottlenose dolphins, as well as learn how the park's trainers' teach dolphins various behaviors, such as jumping, spinning, dancing and "talking."

The one-hour class session gives visitors a memorable opportunity to interact with the dolphins at the dolphin pool. They'll also learn the park's method of training—a modified form of "operant conditioning," which was first introduced in the 1950s. The premise of operant conditioning is reinforcing positive behavior with rewards while ignoring (not punishing) unwanted behavior.

Splash U is priced at $49.95 per person (plus admission to the park, which is $19.95 for adults; $15.95 for senior citizens; $9.95 for juniors aged four to twelve; and free for children aged three and under). Guests must check in fifteen minutes prior to the scheduled session time. Participants must be at least forty-two inches tall.

Sea Life Park is open daily from 9:30 A.M. to 5:00 P.M. For more information or to book Splash U reservations, call 259-7933.

Black Pearl Gallery

Circa 1983

From the azure blue lagoons of Polynesia comes the world's most beautiful pearl. One hundred times more rare than white, the Tahitian Black Pearls are prized for their glorious luster, iridescent orient, large size and rainbow of natural colors.

In Tahiti, the Black Pearl is considered to be a symbol of warmth, love and romance and a source of Good Luck to the giver as well as the receiver.

Although they are called Black Pearls, the colors range from iridescent peacock, emerald green, sea green, silver blue, pink, cranberry and aubergine to dark green and midnight black.

Company founder Don Kelly has specialized exclusively in fine Black Pearl jewelry for over fifteen years in Hawaii. We offer only the highest quality Black Pearls set in 18k and 14k original designer creations. All jewelry purchased at the Black Pearl Galleries comes with a detailed Certificate of Authenticity verifying your pearl is natural in color and shape, direct from Polynesia. We look forward to sharing our pearls with you. Also, visit our web site at blackpearls.com

GOOD EATS

Hawai'i's dining scene keeps getting bigger and better. A pair of popular restaurant chains made their Honolulu debuts this past summer.

Business is "bloomin'" at the Outback Steakhouse, which opened this past summer at the former site of the Royal Marina Theaters in Waikiki. The "Down Under"-themed restaurant is lively, colorful and full of light-hearted fun. For example, while other eateries have appetizers, Outback serves "Aussie-Tizers," including its signature dish, Bloomin' Onion (a starter that's hailed as an "Outback Ab-original").

Popular menu entrées include Brisbane Shrimp Sauté (seasoned and sautéed shrimp with mushrooms, served over fettuccine in a light herb sauce); Rockhampton Rib-Eye (a fourteen-ounce rib-eye steak); Chicken on the Barbie (seasoned and grilled chicken breast served with barbecue sauce and veggies); and Botany Bay Fish O' the Day (fresh catch of the day, lightly seasoned and grilled). From the dessert menu, be sure to try the heavenly Cheesecake Oliva, served with a choice of raspberry or caramel sauce!

Entrée prices range from $9.99 to $21.99. Outback Steakhouse, located at 1765 Ala Moana Boulevard, is open daily from 3:30 to 11:00 P.M. (till 10:00 P.M. on Sundays). Call 951-6274.

Meanwhile, Palomino restaurant is fast becoming a kama'āina favorite at Harbor Court in downtown Honolulu, serving Mediterranean-inspired, Euro-dining specialties created by Chef Fred DeAngelo. Located at the top of Harbor Court's grand staircase, Palomino boasts terrific views of Honolulu Harbor and offers a pleasant and elegant atmosphere.

Lunch entrées, ranging from $5.95 to $14.95, include Roma-Style Pizzas, Wood Oven-Roasted Prawns, 'Ōpaka-paka with Mushroom Stuffing, Spit-Roasted Garlic Chicken, Kiawe-Grilled Seafood Ravioli and Cedar Plank Salmon. Dinner entrées, priced from $9.95 to $26.95, include Shutome Romesco with Cinnamon Cous Cous, Kiawe-Grilled Atlantic Salmon, Honey-Crusted Beef Tenderloin and Spit-Roasted Lamb Shanks.

In addition, Palomino's fifty-foot bar, made of marble and mahogany, is stocked with an extensive selection of wines and microbrewery beers.

Palomino is open weekdays for lunch (11:15 A.M.-2:30 P.M.) and nightly for dinner (5-10 P.M.). Valet and validated parking are available. Call 528-2400.

✿ When measured from its submarine base to its peak, Mauna Kea on the Big Island is the tallest mountain in the world with a total height of 33,480 feet, 13,796 feet appearing above sea level.

✿ The highest sea cliffs in the world are on the north coast of Moloka'i near Umilehi Point. They descend 3,300 feet to the sea at an average incline of more than fifty-five degrees.

✿ With a dome measuring seventy-five miles long and thirty-one miles wide above sea level, 13,680-foot-high Mauna Loa is the largest active volcano in the world.

✿ Mount Wai'ale'ale on Kaua'i (elevation: 5,148 feet) has the most rainy days of any place in the world—up to 350 a year.

✿ Founded in 1831, Lahainaluna School on Maui is the oldest school west of the Rocky Mountains.

✿ 'Iolani Palace on O'ahu, built in 1882, is the only royal palace on American soil.

✿ More than a third of the birds and plants on the United States endangered and threatened species list are native to the Hawaiian Islands. Conservationists call Hawai'i "the endangered species capital of the nation."

✿ Although Hawai'i is best known for its eight main islands (O'ahu, Maui, Moloka'i, Lāna'i, Kaua'i, the Big Island, Kaho'olawe and Ni'ihau), the state actually encompasses 132 islands, reefs and shoals that stretch 1,523 miles, from Kure Atoll to underwater seamounts off the southeast coast of the Big Island. The islands of Midway, however, are administered by the United State Navy and are not part of the state of Hawai'i.

A Dialogue with the Land

by Allan Seiden

The ancient Hawaiians regarded the 'āina, the land, with as much reverence as they did their gods. Today when we travel to the verdant valleys, the lush rain forests, the pristine beaches and the majestic mountains of our Island home, we, too, look upon them with wonder and awe. Volcano on the Big Island is an area whose mana is especially strong.

The sound was at once familiar and otherworldly, a cross between hissing steam and crashing waves. Irresistibly drawn toward the steaming crater, resisting the mental words of caution that told me to stay put, I had hiked a half-mile over fields of newly hardened lava, carefully testing each step with my walking stick to reassure myself that my path was safe.

I dropped to my belly to crawl the last ten feet that separated me from the crater rim, too cautious to approach on foot. Poised on the fragile lip of creation, light-headed from the heat, fumes and the precariousness of my situation, I stared, wide-eyed, into the seething cauldron of earth-matter below.

It was not my first encounter with Kīlauea Volcano, or the goddess Pele, whose spirit I believe inhabits the living earth that I found so compelling. My first encounter with Pele occurred in 1974. I had been in Hawai'i about five months, the last three of which had been spent in Hilo on the Big Island.

One day, I hiked to the 14,000-foot summit of Mauna Loa, where fate saved me from a fearful storm that overtook the mountain just as I reached the peak on what had been a vibrantly clear mid-summer day. I was hiking alone, always a risky proposition, and had not seen a soul since eight in the morning when I set out from the park cabin at Red Hill, about 10,000 feet up Mauna Loa's cratered slopes. At first, vast panoramas, painted in sweeping strokes of color, provided a breathtaking perspective on the Big Island's volcanic heartland. By midday, as the trail made its way to the summit, the setting had become dominated by cinder cones, with clinker and ash giving way to brittle 'a'a and ropy pāhoehoe lavas.

What started as a mist soon became a dense fog that obscured all detail, making it hard to see the ahu, the piles of rock that are the traditional way of marking Hawai'i's wilderness trails. Warmth quickly shifted to an assault of snow and wind, a desolate transformation made frightening by the thought that I would not be able to find the summit cabin where I had planned to spend the night.

Slowed by the impact of the altitude, I wandered about for more than an hour, straining for clues that would keep me on the path, an effort made all the more challenging once an unseen sunset cast the fog in a dim, dusky light. The flatness of the rock-strewn landscape seemed to offer no opportunities for shelter, making survival, not comfort, the main concern. Then, totally unexpectedly, the cabin revealed itself when I was not more than a few feet from its metal siding. Amazed and relieved, I stumbled in, lit a fire in the potbelly stove, ate a freeze-dried dinner, slipped into my sleeping bag and drifted into a deep slumber, safely sheltered from the elements that raged outside.

I awoke to blue skies and a silence that proved as profoundly definitive of the setting as was the cliff-top view into Moku'āweoweo, Mauna Loa's steaming caldera—a vast depression more than twenty miles in circumference, with 600-foot-high walls that fell in vertical decline from within twenty feet of the cabin door. I spent the day hiking the rampart, stopping for hours at a time where the view was too compelling to be ignored.

Soon after my five-day excursion to Moku'āweoweo, Kīlauea erupted. From a vantage point on the rim, I spent an entire day watching the pyrotechnics of a 100-foot-high wall of fire more than two miles long that dissected the crater floor.

During the twenty-three years since that August day, Kīlauea has provided me with many opportunities to see Pele in action. Not every encounter has been reassuring or benign. I have seen her transform landmarks of great beauty into scenes of acrid-smelling desolation. Thus was the black sand beach at Kaimū, whose hala trees and palms were replaced by a steaming flatland seared by a tropic sun, the coastline now a half-mile distant. I have seen whole communities like sleepy Kalapana destroyed. Sites of historic significance have also been lost, including 700-year-old Wa-ha'ula Heiau and the sacred Queen's Baths, whose deep, cold waters had once been off-limits to all but Hawai'i's chiefs.

Thirteen years ago, I remember setting out in a small plane one afternoon when the current eruption cycle was first starting. Pu'u 'Ō'ō, where I'd crawled to the crater's edge several years earlier, was now a 400-foot-high cinder cone spewing lava a thousand feet into the air. We circled the fountain, feeling the intensity of the heat, pulling back only when a sudden barrage of lava rock pellets played a rat-a-tat medley on the exterior of the plane.

On my next visit to the Big Island about six months later, I headed out to Hawai'i Volcanoes National Park by helicopter. Pu'u 'Ō'ō, grown to a 1,000-foot cinder cone, had stopped fountaining. Lava was now making its way to the coast through an intricate maze of lava tubes. A great lava lake had formed on Kīlauea's slopes—molten rock awaiting its turn to flow downhill to the lowlands. Miles away, magnificent plumes of smoke marked the explosive interaction of lava and the sea.

Later that day, I set out across rugged lowlands on a mile-long hike to the coast. The smell of sulfur tainted the air, which was warmed by the still-steaming landscape that lay underfoot. I could feel the heat through the soles of my sneakers. Eyes tearing, I made my way makai, face-to-face with Pele as the sun painted a spectacular twilight.

Poised on a fragile finger of land, I watched the Big Island grow before my eyes, ropy strands of lava falling into the sea, pink smoke rising with each surge of the tide. Glowing pockets of light revealed a dozen places along the coast where lava and sea water were in violent contact. Once again under Pele's hypnotic spell, my spirit soared, finding peace and a sense of belonging in dialogue with the 'āina. ALOHA

We admit, we took our time preparing to open our new resort.
But consider the work environment.

We live on an island where few buildings stand taller than a coconut tree. Clocks are rarely consulted. And traffic? Unknown. Life is sweeter on Kaua'i, and meant to be savored.

This explains, of course, why it took us so long to complete the new Sheraton Kauai Resort. But we assure you, it was well worth the wait. After all, we're the only true resort on Po'ipū Beach, where temperatures linger idly around 74 degrees, and almost every day fulfills its reputation for having Kaua'i's finest weather.

Every room in our Beachfront and Oceanfront Wings faces the ocean. The waves are a pure blue, as is the sky. In our Garden Wing, koi swim lazily through the lagoons. Guests can do the same in our freshwater pools.

Our restaurants will teach guests the word ono (delicious). And taste is not the only sense indulged. Every night, Hawaiian music spills over Po'ipū's white sand. Our massage service gives guests new energy. Which they'll need for all the activities which await them. Tennis matches. Championship golf nearby. Workouts at our fitness center.

Then there's an entire island to explore. A garden of emerald rainforests, umber cliffs, and red earth, Kaua'i has more secret trails than could be discovered in a lifetime.

In short, everything here discourages haste. Except for one thing. With only 414 rooms and suites, we suggest you make your reservation quickly. For more information, call your travel professional or 1-800-STAY ITT, or visit us at www.sheraton-kauai.com. OUR WORLD REVOLVES AROUND YOU.

Reflections on Water

by Rick Carroll

How blessed we are to live on islands—gorgeous tropical islands floating on an ocean as clear and blue as the sky above it. Inland, we delight in the beauty and bounty of streams, rivers, ponds and waterfalls. Water is a vital component of our Hawaiian lifestyle; it is our playground, our source of food, our inspiration.

nce I spent a summer away from Hawai'i, traveling in Asia, and what I came to miss most was not the singular beauty of the place or the soft tropical air, but the water. It wasn't only the cobalt blue Pacific Ocean surrounding Hawai'i that I missed but the embracing wetness of the place. You might say I missed the climate, but my yearning went beyond that. I missed the waterfalls and the ceaseless waves, the light rain everyone calls a blessing and the sudden summer squalls.

Most people think of Hawai'i as a hot tropical island chain where the sun always shines, but that is not always the case. I know Hawai'i as a wet, sensual place, fluid and viscous, full of moisture and humidity, a rainy place full of rainbows.

The rest of the world is a dry, gritty place but not Hawai'i. It is a watery world of mists, fogs and ubiquitous rainbows. Its marine environment includes bogs and swamps and rain forests. Everyone, except hermetically sealed high-rise dwellers, lives in a perpetual state of wetness that is either fresh or salt, depending on where you happen to be.

Early Hawaiians made a fine distinction between salt and fresh water. They called fresh water "wai" and salt water "kai."

Since I have lived near salt water most of my life I always thought of myself as a kai kind of guy, a coast haole, in the local patois. In California, I always chose the ocean over a lake, preferred a lagoon to a pond, a tide pool to a stream. After nearly twenty years in Hawai'i, I now appreciate both wai and kai.

Hawaiians celebrated wetness in song. They wrote chants about waterfalls and rain. And they created many onomatopoeic words for different kinds of water—cool water (wai hu'ihu'i), sprinkling water (wai kāpīpī), tingling water (wai konikoni), misty water (wai noenoe) and brackish water where mountain streams meet the ocean (wai kai).

Hawai'i's most famous beach, Waikīkī, is named not for the ocean but the artesian springs that once flourished there. Waikīkī means "spouting water." My favorite Hawaiian word for water is Wai'ale'ale, which means "rippling or overflowing water," an appropriate title for what is the second wettest spot on Earth. One year, it rained 950 inches there—that's nearly eighty feet of rain!

When I am away from Hawai'i even briefly, I feel dried up and brittle. I can see my skin crack and wrinkle. I miss the wai and kai that keep the Islands insular and make it a great green place.

"I found many ways of being wet," wrote Victoria Nelson in My Time In Hawai'i, one of my favorite books about the Islands. I, too, have experienced the joy of living in a liquid state.

I like the sound of hard rain on a tin roof, the smell of the Islands after a summer squall, the beads of perspiration on my brow after a morning shower. I like to float weightless and buoyant in languid lagoons. I prefer Honolulu's ordinary tap water, often judged the best in America, to Perrier and think all bottled water in Hawai'i is unnecessary.

Years ago, in Hāna during a torrential downpour, I spent the night in the back of a Jeep, snug and warm and laughing under a yellow rain slicker. I have showered in the often rust red falls of Kalalau, and leaped feet first into the fresh water pond at the foot of Puohokamoa Falls on the road to Hāna. Nothing makes my heart pound faster than a plunge into a waterfall pool.

Not always benign, the water of Hawai'i can suddenly turn on you. I have been forced to pull over and stop by hard driving rain on the Pali Highway more than once. Waterfalls become deadly swollen streams. Flash floods inundate low-lying settlements. Rogue waves sweep fishermen off coastal perches. Tsunamis in 1946 and 1960 claimed 157 lives in Hilo on the Big Island.

Thankfully, all my own experiences with water have been less menacing. I crossed the Kaiwi Channel, considered one of the most dangerous in the world, in a twenty-four-foot chase boat in fifteen-foot seas during last year's Moloka'i Hoe race, only to learn afterwards that the Coast Guard rescued a half dozen swamped canoes.

Once, off the coast of Lāna'i while snorkeling near Shark Island, the tide changed and I found myself in the Kealaikahiki Channel, which means "The Way To Tahiti" because that's where it goes.

A torrential storm dumped fifteen inches of rain in twenty-four hours on my house one year, flooding the first floor and turning Lanikai into a mini-

Venice for a day. We kayaked down the middle of 'A'alapapa Drive when the sun came out.

Sitting in Tokyo on a gray day that summer in Asia, I found myself dreaming of the soft warm rain that drizzles down on Hilo.

I could close my eyes and see all the great bays—Kāne'ohe, Māmala, Keala-kekua, Hilo and Hanalei, and the little pretty ones—Hanauma, Kahana and Waimea. My eyes ached to see again the amazing variations of the color blue, from turquoise to deep purple with shades of sapphire, cobalt, mulberry and indigo for effect.

I could almost feel the foggy dew of Mānoa and the fine mist raised by 'Akaka Falls. I could hear the roar of North Shore surf in winter. I yearned to snorkel the green tide pools along Maui's black lava coast.

Out there in Asia it all seemed like a dream, and I suppose in a way it is. The wonderful waters of Hawai'i, the wai and kai, are so otherworldly and ephemeral I suspect they must be two of the essential elements of paradise. ALOHA

Beauty and the Beach

by Marcie Carroll

Cruise through our neighborhoods and you'll be treated to a tantalizing slice of Hawai'i's unique culture. Many local neighborhoods are defined by a distinctive feature—a historic site, perhaps, or a building, or a natural landmark like a mountain or river. Lanikai, on the windward side of O'ahu, is known for its beach.

I am addicted to natural beauty and, particularly, to the beautiful beach where I live. I came to Hawai'i with a yearning to live close enough to the warm, clear sea to see it, smell it and jump in, any time, any day. I wanted to be able to walk to the beach and drive anywhere else. O'ahu is ringed with spectacular beaches, but none is more enticing than Lanikai Beach, on the morning side of the Ko'olau mountains, as lovely a spot as the planet has to offer and my home for the past fourteen years.

For better or worse, Lanikai was memorialized by a Maryland marine researcher as "America's Best Beach" in 1996. Doctor Stephen Leatherman liked its silky coral sands and awesome scenic views. Fortunately, he did not include a map (and neither will I), so not too much has changed at my out-of-the-way haven.

My beach defines the odd little windward neighborhood of Lanikai, misnamed by a 1920s-era developer who wanted to call his creation "heavenly sea"

(that would have been "Kailani"). Lanikai is a few hundred homesites squeezed between the sea and rocky Ka 'Iwa ridge, formed like the wing of the mighty 'iwa (frigate bird). The ridge hides views of the beach.

Yet people inevitably find it. Many fall in love with the place and brave the winding drive over green peaks day and night. City friends visit every chance they get to escape the hot pavement. Travelers from afar who've missed the turn for Kailua Beach Park and who've stumbled onto Lanikai, or who were led to Buzz's Steak House and the beach beyond by akamai kama'aina, return year after year. All these are beach people, and Lanikai is that kind of beach. A secret shared by the faithful.

There are broader strands of sand in Hawai'i, with better access and more onshore amenities, but there is something special about Lanikai. Its fine golden sands are ephemeral, always shifting with the tides and storms and seasons, settling offshore to give its share of the Pacific its distinctive brilliant green and aquamarine hues. Sometimes the beach vanishes under high tides, while low tides leave it bare and defenseless.

Nearly a mile offshore, a fringe of reef breaks the force of the waves and pokes above the horizon in the form of two little islands called the Mokulua ("two islands"), part of a great sunken crater whose edges include other neighboring islets and land ridges in the area. So picturesque are the Mokulua islets against the azure waters, so typical of the tropical dream, that photos of the scene show up in the oddest places: masquerading as Australia in Down-Under tourism ads, for instance, or featured as the view to expect from your room in ads for a chain whose Waikiki hotels are miles away.

Lanikai Beach borders a large lagoon-like channel formed by the reef. Sheltered waters, twenty feet at the deepest, flow over a drowned beach dotted with chunks of reef rock and coral left behind by old tidal waves. Turtles and eels cruise among the rocks, while schools of silvery 'oama are born and caught along the shallows.

The beach is the core of our neighborhood, the place where strangers meet and children grow up. We proudly claim a famous hālau and a champion outrigger canoe team, but the beach is what cements Lanikai. People get married, baptized and eulogized on the beach. Toddlers learn to swim there without fear of the waves that pound nearby beaches. Bodies in scanty attire, ranging from young and perfect to old and lumpy, are regularly displayed on the warm sands. People-watching is a given.

This place has been my joy, inspiration and solace—a place to turn cartwheels, learn tai chi, plot novels, comfort friends and mourn my deceased mother. While the beach is only crowded on Sundays and holidays, it is almost always in use, good weather or bad. Winter storms are most impressive when you venture out on the sand and see the normally placid waters whipped to froth and tearing viciously at the land. When I wake in the night to the white-noise roar of offshore surf, I know the devout will be up before the sun to paddle out to surfing spots like "Lefts," "Rights" or "No Can Tells."

Dawn comes to Lanikai Beach with a symphony of birdsong: dainty chattering from tiny red bills, noisy mynah conversations, shrill wake-up calls from the cardinals, clumsy bulbul whistles, and above it all, the heartstopping melodic contralto of the shama. The skies are streaked with reds and golds before the sun blasts out of the sea. On the beach, early swimmers, walkers and runners glory in the sunrise and watch for the green flash. Nothing is so bad that a Lanikai dawn can't make it better.

All through the day, mothers and children, vacationers and others bring towels and chairs to the sand and bake, basting themselves periodically in the warm green sea. Mothers bring newborns here for a first touch of lapping seawater and swimming lessons. Snorkelers regularly inspect the deeper coralheads. Film crews bring their models and actors to pose before the natural technicolor of Lanikai. Winter days bring humpback whales, who spout and cavort outside the reef and hang out around the Mokulua islets.

Now and then, howling tradewinds blow up a cloud of pastel plastic butterflies, and my windsurfer neighbors streak back and forth until they collapse on shore to rest before they carry home their rigs on their heads. Shoreline fishermen bring their families, poles, bait and sometimes sizzling woks to the beach early in the day or after the sunbathers retire to their showers.

When the moon rises, out come the nocturnal beach strollers. I have walked the strand in silvery moonlight when ghostly boys on skateboards with sails whooshed by. In the bright mercurial waters, you can see colors, at least echoes of blue—perhaps the inspiration of the song "Blue Hawaiian Moonlight." We can't bear to shut out this scene with shades. Once I saw a moonlit rainbow over the Mokulua, an unforgettable pearly rendition of the daytime classic. Sights like this elude film; they can only be absorbed through the eyes and stored in the heart.

Someday I may have to leave Lanikai and not return, packing my tattered pareus and albums of sunrise pictures and relinquishing my place on the beach to another aficionado. I'm not sure I can live without it. But I know every day will be richer for having had the beauty of the beach and the ebb and flow of the sea to comfort my spirit. ALOHA

20 INTRIGUING ISLANDERS

✿ Akebono. Christened Chad Rowan, the six-foot, eight-inch athlete from Waimānalo, O'ahu is a champion sumo wrestler in Japan. In 1993, he became the first-ever gaijin (foreigner) to ascend to the ranks of yokozuna (grand champion)—the highest rank in the sport.

✿ Irmgard Aluli. Her impressive contributions to Hawaiian music—Aluli has written more than 300 songs—are matched only by her deep love for the Islands. This spritely eighty-six-year-old still performs regularly with her group, Puamana, which includes her daughters Mihana Souza and Aima McManus, and her niece Luana McKenney.

✿ George Ariyoshi. In 1974, Ariyoshi became the first non-haole governor of an American state and went on to serve as Hawai'i's chief executive for thirteen years. Today, he continues to serve Hawai'i through his positions on several advisory boards and committees, including the boards of the Pacific International Center for High Technology Research, Bishop Museum and the East-West Center. Ariyoshi's recently released book, With Obligation to All, discusses his values, philosophies and views on politics in Hawai'i.

✿ Henry Auwae. "Papa Henry" is regarded as one of the foremost practitioners of the Hawaiian healing arts. Using roots, bark, seeds, flowers, leaves and other natural ingredients, he concocts traditional herbal remedies to relieve a wide variety of ills, from asthma to arthritis.

✿ Pat Namaka Bacon. Bacon, a Hawaiian expert and respected kumu hula, has judged numerous Merrie Monarch competitions, Hilo's renowned annual hula festival. She is the hānai daughter of the late Mary Kawena Pukui, the translator and author of the Hawaiian Dictionary and many other scholarly Hawaiian works.

✿ The Brothers Cazimero. Brothers Robert and Roland have been standouts in the Hawaiian music scene since 1971. They have earned more than twenty Hōkū Awards (the local equivalent of the Grammys), and were one of the first Island entertainers to perform in Carnegie Hall.

✿ Rick Grigg. A researcher and oceanographer at the University of Hawai'i-Mānoa's School of Ocean & Earth Science & Technology, Grigg has authored four books about Hawai'i's ocean life (and edited three others). He is an authority on the developing island of Lō'ihi, located off the east coast of the Big Island, which scientists say will break the ocean's surface in about "1,000 human lifetimes."

✿ Don Ho. Two words: "Tiny Bubbles." Even after more than thirty years in show business, the legendary entertainer still delights audiences five nights a week at the Waikiki Beachcomber Hotel.

✿ Senator Daniel Inouye. One of the most respected leaders in the U.S. Congress, this decorated World War II veteran has been serving Hawai'i in the political arena since 1954, five years before Hawai'i achieved statehood.

✿ George Hu'e'u Sanford Kanahele. Much of today's renewed interest in the Hawaiian culture can be attributed to this respected civic leader, businessman, author, educator, historian and scholar.

Kanahele is known for his role in the development of "cultural tourism," the concept of sharing Hawaiian values and culture in the hospitality industry. He is also the author of several books, including Restoring Hawaiianess to Waikiki and Critical Reflections on Cultural Values and Hotel Management in Hawai'i.

✿ Herb Kawainui Kane. No other Island artist has combined Hawaiian art and history more effectively than the gifted Kane. He also helped design—and captained—the historic voyaging canoe, Hōkūle'a in 1976. Kane also is one of the founders of the Polynesian Voyaging Society.

✿ Doctor Richard Kelley. As chairman of the board of the Outrigger Hotels & Resorts, Kelley is a leader in Hawai'i's visitor industry. Ever since Outrigger opened its first property in Waikiki more than fifty years ago, it has held its own against major chains like Hilton, Hyatt and Sheraton. Today, the family-owned Outrigger hotel chain is the largest in the state with more than 9,000 rooms on O'ahu, Maui, Kauai and the Big Island.

✿ Beatrice Krauss. Affectionately known as the "Grande Dame of Mānoa Valley," the venerable Krauss—she's ninety-three—still frequently visits the 194-acre Lyon Arboretum in Mānoa Valley, where she was a longtime volunteer. Few people can match this retired ethnobotanist's knowledge of Hawai'i's abundant plant life. Krauss is the author of a book titled Plants in Hawaiian Culture, which describes the use of native plants in pre-contact Hawai'i.

✿ Brook Mahealani Lee. The twenty-six-year-old Pearl City beauty is currently traveling all over the world, spreading the spirit of aloha as Miss Universe 1997. Lee majored in English at Chaminade University and hopes to receive her master's degree in Communications. Her career aspiration is to become a filmmaker.

✿ Jack Lord. "Book'em, Dano!" Lord was the poker-faced star of "Hawai'i Five-O," the Hawai'i-based series that dominated prime-time television from 1968 to 1980. Lord, who lives on O'ahu with his wife, Marie will be celebrating his sixty-seventh birthday on December 30.

✿ Jesse Sapolu. The former football standout at Farrington High School and the University of Hawai'i went on to become a five-time Super Bowl champion with the San Francisco 49ers. He remains a big presence in the local community, working to improve the lives of Hawai'i's young people.

✿ Nainoa Thompson. As navigator of the double-hulled voyaging canoe, Hōkūle'a, in 1980, Thompson became the first Polynesian in 900 years to use ancient celestial navigation methods to sail between Hawai'i and Tahiti. Today, the gifted Thompson continues his mission to perpetuate the "wayfinding" techniques of the ancient Polynesians by developing sailing programs to educate Island students.

✿ Haunani Kay Trask and Mililani Trask. Haunani heads the Hawaiian Studies Program at the University of Hawai'i; Mililani leads the pro-sovereignty group, Ka Lahui Hawai'i. Together, through passion and intellect, these two sisters work to revive Hawaiian language and traditions—and establish the independent nation of Hawai'i.

Aloha, Anuheia

by Sally-Jo Keala-o-ānuenue Bowman

Hawai'i is rich in resources, one of them certainly being its people. Our population is more ethnically diverse than any other on Earth. We're proud to acknowledge kama'āina who have made major contributions in such areas as business, politics, the arts, music, sports and science. And we're equally proud to recognize those who will never rank among the world's famous—but who possess the rare gift of touching and changing lives.

Her name was Anubea. The last time I saw her, we were just eighteen. By then, she had given me something as important as life itself. But it took me forty years to accept it as my own.

In Hilo in May of 1995, I met Hawaiian kūpuna Auntie Abbie Napeahi and Uncle Howard Pea when I was researching an article on the spiritually-based Hawaiian family counseling process, ho'oponopono. Auntie Abbie carefully explained the steps of ho'oponopono, from finding the core problem to forgiving all parties involved and cutting loose from the pain. And then, part-way through the interview, she gently shifted the focus from ho'oponopono to me.

Auntie Abbie asked me to lay before them the problem deepest in my heart, the one giving me the most pain in my life. In my mind I quickly reeled through classic candidates: Money. Marriage. Family. None of them seemed to warrant ho'oponopono.

Then I did the bravest thing I've ever done. For the first time, I named out loud the gaping, lifelong hole in my heart: "Although I am Hawaiian by blood, I'm not sure I am a worthy Hawaiian."

I told them my Hawaiian school's mission had been to turn us into haoles. My haole mother and Hawaiian father both had done the same.

My mind reeled off more reasons: I knew no more than a couple hundred isolated words of my language. I didn't even look very Hawaiian. My Hawaiian grandmother had died when my father was a baby, and no one ever passed down to us the knowledge of our guardian spirits, the 'aumākua. Pain flooded me as if I had ripped a bandage from an open wound.

I did not voice my last, dark secret: I didn't have a proper Hawaiian name, one my family gave me. Without a Hawaiian name, I thought I had no lineage, no place with my ancestors, no heritage. I was nobody. The fact had burst forever into my consciousness when I first enrolled at Kamehameha Schools in the seventh grade. Unlike public school where my class had only three Hawaiians, all 400 girls at Kamehameha were Hawaiian. Almost all my classmates had both English and Hawaiian given names.

In tenth grade, in the fall of 1955, Anuhea Nahalea brought my problem to the surface. She and I, and about forty other sophomores, boarded in Dorm K at the top of the Kapālama Heights campus.

About four o'clock one rare afternoon when we were free from the dorm's scheduled after-school tasks like washing and ironing, Anuhea asked me to cut her hair. She'd asked me to do this several times before, though we weren't in the same academic section and didn't know each other very well.

That day she sat in my room with a towel clipped around her neck with a wooden spring clothespin. As I snipped at her unruly waves, she said, "Eh, what's your Hawaiian name?"

I could barely admit I didn't have one.

She said matter-of-factly, "I give you one." She didn't speak again until just before the haircut was over. "Keala-o-ānuenue," she said. "The Path of the Rainbow."

The name was beautiful, in sound and in concept. I didn't dare ask why she chose it for me. I loved it. But in the back of my mind I thought I mustn't use it because my parents hadn't given it to me. "Keala-o-ānuenue" felt kapu to me. I would be a thief to call myself The Path of the Rainbow. So I didn't use the name. But I couldn't forget it.

After we graduated, I went away to college in Minnesota, where people thought Hawai'i was a foreign country. Occasionally, one of the more worldly people asked me about my Hawaiian name. "Keala-o-ānuenue. The Path of the Rainbow." And I explained that Anuhea had given it to me, aching in my heart because it wasn't a "real" name.

The ache became bigger—an elusive, ghostly void. By the time I was thirty, sometimes I wept from the chronic pain, but still I did not know its source. I had moved to Oregon and was visiting Hawai'i more often—a mixed blessing, for in Hawai'i I was far more likely to meet someone who would ask the dreaded question that had become the symbol of my grieving heart. I could lie and say I didn't have a Hawaiian name. But I wanted my name. Yet, each time I spoke it, I always added the disclaimer: I got the name at school.

I mentioned none of the name agony to Auntie Abbie and Uncle Howard. My doubtful worth as a Hawaiian was enough.

Now the room filled with Auntie Abbie's mana, her life force, her spiritual power. I felt like I was swimming safely in a deep ocean of no-nonsense love. "You must stop blaming your parents and your school," she said, touching my arm and looking deep into my puka heart with her wise eyes. "Look at what they did give you. They gave you the power to write, the power to do your work. Let go of the blame. And never use it for an excuse again."

Instantly I felt myself do exactly as she said. I began to weep in relief. The time had come for the puka to heal.

Uncle Howard asked my Hawaiian name. "Keala-o-ānuenue," I said, barely able to speak. "Oh, yes, The Path of the Rainbow," he replied, calmly accepting something I hadn't been able to accept for myself. Tears poured down my face. And then Uncle Howard and Auntie Abbie folded me up in their arms and their hearts and told me the name was a special gift—a gift of honor, a name I had grown into, for I had become a writer with the power to touch people's hearts, a writer who writes about Hawaiians, who are the heart of the rainbow.

And then they said, "Welcome home, Keala-o-ānuenue."

In the weeks that followed, I came to understand that forty years earlier, on the day of the haircut, Anuhea had given me the answer to the question I had spent my life asking myself: Who am I? All I had to do was grow into the answer, bare my heart, accept the truth of the gift. Now I can speak the simple answer. I am Keala-o-ānuenue.

I know now in my heart that our Hawaiian names are metaphors bundled in multiple meanings that we grow into. However we receive them, our names are a means by which we know we belong to our homeland, our 'āina.

My name is Keala-o-ānuenue, The Path of the Rainbow. I thank Anuhea for the name I have become. ALOHA

Good Sports

by Lance Tominaga

Living in a place where summer reigns nearly all year round, it's no wonder Islanders are active. We enjoy swimming, surfing, sailing, bicycling, hiking, jogging, horseback riding, golfing, fishing, kayaking and a host of other activities that immerse us in the warmth of the glorious Hawaiian sun. These sports provide us with challenges, pleasure—and some very valuable lessons about life.

In sports, as in life, there are successes and failures; we all have to learn to live with both.

During my nine years of writing for ALOHA Magazine, the symbolic relationship between sports and life has been made clear to me time and again:

Remember what matters most. On Kalapakī Beach on Kaua'i, I watched crew after exhausted crew competing in a long-distance canoe race touch shore, only to be instantly rejuvenated by the hugs and cheers of friends and family. As the competitors basked in the warm embraces of their loved ones, I could not tell the winners from the losers.

Cherish the good times. At Waikīkī Beach on O'ahu, I witnessed the joy of young boys and girls taking their first surfing lesson. Sure, they had their share of spills. But the thrill of riding their first wave far outweighed the falls. Years from now, when they reach back in time for happy memories, I have no doubt they will remember that moment and smile.

Great achievements require great dedication. Three years ago, a friend of mine, Robin Isayama, became the first woman ever to swim the Kaiwi Channel—a treacherous thirty-five-mile stretch of ocean between Moloka'i and O'ahu. She had trained for nine months, logging hundreds of practice hours in the water. "For the longest time, my day was swim, work, swim, sleep," she said. When she took that last stroke and collapsed on Sandy Beach, there was no doubt all that effort was well worth it.

My most memorable experience this year wasn't associated with a competition, or, in the strictest of senses, even a sport. Instead, it was about the biggest game of all—the game of life.

In April, an assignment took me to the Four Seasons Resort Hualālai on the Big Island. I was covering Moku O Hawai'i Na Haumana Kēlō, a student sailing program designed to help "at risk" youths. Under the tutelage of crew members from the voyaging canoe Makali'i—a sister vessel to the famous Hōkūle'a—more than 150 young men and women from eight Big Island high schools had been learning the rudiments of sailing using ancient celestial navigation methods. They were also learning about their Hawaiian culture—its language, history and customs.

I love sports. They are, in my opinion, more than just fun and games—they are a reflection of life. In sports, as in life, there are goals set and strived for, and obstacles to overcome. In sports, as in life, there is a time to work as a team and a time to make our marks as individuals. In sports, as in life, much of what is accomplished is a result of sheer work and dedication as much as it is our God-given abilities.

More importantly, according to the program's leaders, the students were learning about themselves, and the importance of teamwork, commitment and respect. In the process, they would gain something they had precious little of before joining Moku O Hawai'i Na Haumana Kēlō: hope.

From the moment I met them, it was clear that the program had already made a positive impact on the students. I had been warned that many of them were social outcasts, juvenile delinquents saddled with one problem or another. Many were from broken homes; many were battling drug problems.

So I was surprised to see these kids walking around the resort's beach area—canoes anchored safely offshore—displaying ear-to-ear smiles and an aura of positivity. They spoke to me with enthusiasm. To each other, they offered heartfelt words of encouragement.

"I never expected myself to make it this far (in the program), but now it's a part of my life," beamed Ryan Stevens, a Konawaena sophomore. "We are one 'ohana. We all work together, and it brings us closer every day. And from here, it's only going to get better!"

Nathan Grace, a big-bodied Hawaiian with an easygoing demeanor, noted, "I'd been looking for something (like this) to grasp onto, and now these people are like family to me. Everyone here treats each other with respect. You get to meet students from other schools and make a lot of friends. That's what I like about this."

I will never forget what happened the next morning as the sun began to rise, casting a golden glow on the Makali'i and Hōkūle'a. The calm ocean waters seemed to still be asleep, but on the beach, the students were already scurrying about, making final preparations for the day's sail to Kailua Bay. Given their troubled pasts, it was quite a sight: students eagerly going about their tasks, working in perfect harmony and cooperation. The campsite was broken down; food, water and other provisions were packed; crew leaders were going over the day's carefully planned agenda.

"Good luck, Makali'i! Hōkūle'a loves you guys!" shouted Karina Enocencio, student captain for the Hōkūle'a. Her proclamation was met by cheers from both crews, followed by warm embraces all around.

Minutes later, the youngsters lifted the anchors and hoisted the sails, the bows of their canoes pointed south. "Fitting they should begin their sail in the morning," I thought, as I watched the Makali'i and Hōkūle'a glide away. Every morning represents a new day, a clean slate. And that's what Moku O Hawai'i Na Haumana Kēlō has provided for these young men and women.

I returned home that day with a renewed sense of hope for mankind. That is the one thing that helps us to sail from one challenge to the next. ALOHA

Cascada

Royal Garden at Waikiki
440 Olohana Street, 943-0202

Cascada transports guests to a world where dining is an art form—an occasion to be enjoyed and remembered. The setting is reminiscent of the dining terraces found in villas along the South of France. Both indoor and al fresco dining are available, overlooking a cascading waterfall freefalling into the swimming pool. The menu offers a selection of Continental specialties updated with touches of California and Pacific Rim cuisines. Eggplant and Zucchini Souffle on a bed of fresh tomato sauce drizzled with aioli and rouille, and Pan Seared Pork Tenderloin with hot Italian sausage, braised with spinach topped with cranberry pear relish and cranberry ginger sauce are the house specialties. Validated valet parking available. Open daily for breakfast, lunch and dinner.

Hau Tree Lanai

New Otani Kaimana Beach Hotel
2863 Kalakaua Avenue, 921-7066

Hidden on the quiet side of Waikiki, The New Otani Kaimana Beach Hotel holds a delicious secret. To the delight of local and visiting insiders, the open-air Hau Tree Lanai offers breakfast, lunch and dinner beneath the arbor of a hau tree. Evening guests enjoy carefully prepared roast duck, veal, steak, lobster and fresh seafood entrees—but the specialty is sunset. Once sun touches sea, flaming torches and winking lights provide an incomparable romantic setting practically on the beach. Open daily for breakfast and lunch. Hau Tree Lanai serves from 7 a.m. For reservations, call 921-7066.

1121 Nuuanu Avenue, 521-2900

Exciting and innovative in both cuisine and atmosphere, let Indigo heighten your dining experience in Honolulu. With a true blending of local influences allow us to treat you to our rendition of East meets West. With seasonal menus and stylish decor come enjoy a truly fresh approach to what dining is all about. Starting off with our famous Sake Martinis and ending with Madame Pele's Chocolate Volcano, come take a journey in our world of Indigo. On the edge of Downtown in the Historic Chinatown District, we are just minutes by foot from Aloha Tower. Monday-Friday hours are 11:30 A.M.-2:30 P.M.; 5:30-9:30 P.M. Saturday hours are noon-9:30 P.M. and Sunday 5:30-9:30 P.M.

Traditional charm, contemporary ambience and the flavors of authentic Japanese cuisine are blended perfectly at Shizu Restaurant and Sushi Bar. Shizu, serving breakfast, lunch and dinner daily, is located on the fourth floor of the Royal Garden at Waikiki, with master chefs overseeing the kitchen to ensure that their renditions of classic Japanese dishes are flawless. Diners can enjoy Teppanyaki, sushi or may select individual menu items of Japanese Specialties. The restaurant promises a memorable dining experience. Validated valet parking available.

The Chart House
1765 Ala Moana Boulevard, 941-6669

The finest fresh seafood and steaks, idyllic Hawaiian sunsets over the marina, and award-winning service have made the Chart House a favorite with residents and visitors for 26 years. Known for its succulent roasted prime rib, the Chart House is also famous for its selection of live Maine and Hawaiian lobsters, Dungeness crab and Kahuku prawns. The lounge offers Honolulu's hottest pupu menu, and live Island-style entertainment makes this a lively spot. Look forward to an evening at the Chart House filled with good times and lots of warm aloha!

MARRIAGE LICENSE REQUIREMENTS

You need a valid license before you can tie the knot in Hawaii. Licenses may be obtained at the State Department of Health, Marriage License Office, in downtown Honolulu, or by appearing before a marriage licensing agent on the Neighbor Islands (your hotel concierge or wedding coordinator can provide you with the name and phone number of the nearest agent).

The bride and groom must both be present to obtain the license, which is valid statewide for thirty days immediately upon being issued. The fee is $25, payable in cash.

Both partners must be at least eighteen years old to be married without the consent of their parents. The couple must present a driver's license, state or military I.D. card, passport or other form of identification with a current photo. Partners who have been married before will be asked to state the date, county and state (or country) in which the most recent divorce was finalized. Both partners also must provide the names of their parents and where they were born. Those under the age of eighteen should contact the Marriage License Office for information about additional requirements.

Brides do not have to undergo premarital screening for rubella.

To obtain a free "Getting Married in Hawaii" pamphlet, write to the Marriage License Office at 1250 Punchbowl Street, Honolulu, Hawaii 96813, or call 586-4544 between 8:00 A.M. and 4:00 P.M. Monday through Friday. The Marriage License Office is closed on holidays.

OH, HOW THE YEARS GO BY

The cassette was given to me by one of my editors, who compiled the music himself and titled it Twenty Years of ALOHA. "This should be interesting," I thought. I popped it into my tape player, pressed "play" and then settled in behind my desk for another long evening of catch-up work. On my desk was a tidy stack of proposals, inquiries, bills and other business matters—important stuff, but not exactly material for a future "Publishers Have More Fun" column. With a weary sigh, I punched up my computer and began clacking away at my keyboard.

Then the song played.

"Oh, how the years go by

Oh, how the love brings tears to my eyes

All through the changes, the soul never dies

We laugh, we fight, we cry

As the years go by..."

I had never heard the song before (I admit I'm more in tune with Andy Williams than Vanessa Williams). The music was nice enough, but it was the lyrics that opened the floodgate of memories for me.

Oh, how the years go by. Has it been twenty years already? It seems like only yesterday that ALOHA made its debut, bringing the best of Hawai'i into homes across America and other parts of the world. I guess time does fly when you're having fun! Just think: twenty years ago, Jack Lord—"Steve McGarrett"—was still telling Dano to "book'em" on "Hawai'i Five-O." Hawai'i's annual visitor count was "only" 3.5 million (compared to 6.5 million today). And twenty years ago, if any Island hotel had a "web site," that meant a phone call to the exterminator! (Trivia question: who was the subject of the very first feature story in ALOHA's premiere issue? Answer: Don Ho.)

Oh, how the love brings tears to my eyes. I'll try not to get misty-eyed on you, but I think what makes ALOHA a special publication is the love for our Island home that goes into every issue. It's a passion equally shared by our staff and you, our readers. To each and every one of you, I extend my warmest and deepest mahalo. This one's for you.

All through the changes... Over the years, some very talented people have passed through our hallowed office halls, and this edition of ALOHA is dedicated to them as well. Change, we understand, is a fact of life. The latest change in our ALOHA family is one our long-time readers will want to know: Cheryl Chee Tsutsumi, our editor for the past ten years, has decided to move on to new challenges and ventures. We are extremely grateful for her efforts in helping ALOHA become the magazine of Hawai'i, and we wish her all the best. She will be greatly missed.

Even so, we look forward to even brighter days ahead. As the song goes, the soul never dies. As long as there are people (like you) who dream about Hawai'i and have a passion for all it offers, there will always be a place for ALOHA Magazine. We hope you enjoyed this commemorative edition. Here's to the next twenty years!

Aloha,

Rick Davis,
Publisher

PS.—I got so worked up about our twentieth anniversary that I almost forgot to wish you all a Mele Kalikimaka and Hau'oli Makahiki Hou! In fact, may I suggest that a subscription to ALOHA makes the perfect holiday gift for family and friends. More details can be found elsewhere in this issue!

 Happy Holidays from the staff of ALOHA Magazine!
